

Consignment Charges Agreement for Motor Vehicle Sales

Consignor defined: A person who places a vehicle with a consignee for consignment sale.

Consignee defined: A dealer who accepts vehicles for sale under an agreement that the dealer will pay the consignor for any sold vehicle and will return any unsold vehicles.

The rights and duties of consignors and consignees for consignment sales of vehicles:

- The consignor may take possession of the consigned vehicle at any time it is in the possession of the consignee, if the consignor has notified the consignee in writing and has paid all agreed-to charges.
- If the consignor and the consignee agree in writing that the consignor will receive a percentage of the sale price, or have negotiated the sale price in writing, the consignee must report the exact sale price of the vehicle to the consignor in writing.
- The consignee must give the consignor written notice of a consigned vehicle sale within seven calendar days. The consignee must then pay the consignor within 21 calendar days of the date of sale, or within 15 calendar days of receiving full payment for the vehicle (whichever is earlier), unless the purchase agreement is canceled within 21 days.
- If the purchase is canceled within 21 calendar days after the date of the sale, the consignee must notify the consignor in writing within five calendar days.
- The consignment agreement must explain who is responsible for damage or misuse to the vehicle, and the permitted uses the consignee may make. Then, before driving the consigned vehicle, the consignee must remove all plates and permits from the vehicle and attach the consignee's dealer plates.
- The consignee must keep this form and the consignment agreement on file at the principal place of business.
